Up From Slavery

Lesson for April 13, 1958

THE most amazing race in the world got off to a bad start. An Emperor once asked a scholar of his court if he could give him in one sentence the greatest proof of God. The answer was "The Jewish race." What he meant was that nobody with any sense, ordinary common sense that is, would have expected the Hebrew race to survive, much less to overspread the earth, still less to contribute to the world as they have. What became of the Hittites, Hivites, Jebusites, Hurrians, all the miscellaneous hodge-podge of tribes and "nations" (mostly no bigger than Texas counties) that filled what we now call the Middle East? Dead and buried and their languages with them. And of all that mess of scrambling little peoples, one of the smallest and least promising was none other than the people who—before they rose to the dignity of being "a People"—were at the very bottom of the heap.

Dr. Foreman

"You Shall Remember"

You can't get farther down than slavery. That is where the Israelite nation started, or if you like, that was where it was before it started. You might think that as their astonishing history rolled on, and they took a dignified place in an ancient world — you might think they would like to forget their exceedingly low origins. Some did, no doubt, forget all about it. But their prophets and their great men remembered. It was written into their Law: "You shall remember that you were a servant in the land of Egypt." The Ten Commandments begin: "I am the Lord your God, who brought you out of the land of bondage." What was the point of remembering those grimy days in Egypt? One reason was that by remembering in time to time, they would be most thankful for the safety, the prestige, the luxuries even, which they later came to enjoy.

Divine Deliverer

The other thing the Hebrews were taught to remember, another reason for remembering their long slavery years, was that God delivered them. They did not deliver themselves, they had no powerful friends among the nations. Nobody fought to set them free, they did not raise as hard as they could on their behalf. They just walked out. Without getting ahead of our story, we can recall that the entire exodus from Egypt is set forth as God's doing. So when the Israelites thought back on their past, then not only humble but rather horrible beginnings, they were expected to be grateful to God for taking them out of there. It can be so with us. Even a poet who lived before Christianity could make one of his heroes say, after a terrible shipwreck, "Perhaps one day it will be a pleasure to remember even this." And a Christian can say far more. Every trouble we have had, every disaster we have survived, every danger passed, every humiliation and hardship endured,—if we have come out of it with a Christian spirit, will make us all the more grateful to God.

"Uses of Adversity"

Some people's only university is adversity; the "University of Hard Knocks." "Sweet are the uses of adversity," said a poet once. Adversity is not sweet, and no one should pretend to like it. But its uses are many. Besides the two already mentioned, a heightened appreciation of present blessings, and a sense of gratitude to God, our Father, let us set down a third: The capacity for sympathy. There were many minority groups in the Hebrew nation, from the first days to their last. They would always be tempted to treat those minorities,—people of a different race and background—with contempt. They would consider them fair game for exploitation. They would tolerate them only as second-class citizens. But one of the main good uses they could make of their memories of slavery, was not to despise minority groups, the helpless men and women on the fringes of society. So it is today. There is not a race in the world that did not have a lowly, even ravage background. No people was ever born civilized, no people was ever born powerful. Any nation that forgets its own small beginnings is on the way to fatal pride.

Predict New Type Family Doctor Will Soon Appear

CHICAGO—Prognostication is in the air with the welcoming of the new year.

And from his vantage point as a trustee of the American Medical Association, Dr. Julius P. Price sees a new type of general practitioner emerging within the next 30 years.

Dr. Price, who is 56, the father of three grown children and a practicing pediatrician in Florence, S.C., said the next 30 years will show as many scientific achievements and changes in the way medicine is practiced as the American people and physicians have experienced in the last 30 years.

Dr. Price said:

"Medical practice will change. The trend toward specialization will continue, with an increase in group practices in clinics. These clinics will be staffed and equipped to furnish complete care for the ambulatory patient, and a large segment of the population will patronize their services.

"There will still be those, however, who want individual physicians for themselves and their families, and for these a new type of general practitioner will emerge to take the place of the present general practitioner.

"His work will consist of internal medicine, pediatrics and psychiatry, with office procedures in orthopedics, gynecology, and surgery."

Tons of Cure For National Headache

NEWARK — Americans must have plenty of headaches. In a recent year they took a multitude of pain relievers, including over 7,000 tons of aspirin products, more than 100 tablets for every man, woman and child in the country.

While headaches and remedies are plentiful, there is a lack of complete scientific understanding of their causes and effects, according to Dr. Morton J. Rodman, professor of pharmacology at Rutgers University College of Pharmacy here.

The State University pharmacologist explains that doctors know the brain itself is insensitive to pain. They think that most headaches are caused by large arteries and veins on the surface of the brain and the base of the skull "pulling" on nerves which carry pain impulses.

Anything which enlarges, displaces or presses on these blood vessels tends to stimulate pain-sensitive nerve endings.

Cuban Curiosities Added To Institute Collection

WASHINGTON — Lizards apparently immune to bullets, bat-crushing snakes, pigmy boa constrictors, frogs that never get polywogs, and frogs less than a third of an inch long are among the curiosities of reptile and amphibian life recently collected in Cuba for the Smithsonian Institution by David Hardy, a graduate student of the University of Maryland.

Most curious of the lot are the "bulletproof" lizards. They are large iguanas, 3 to 4 feet long, with a curious resemblance to antidiluvian monsters. Mr. Hardy found them in limestone outcroppings and on sandy islands along the Cuban coast.

"You just can't kill them with bullets," he says. Over and over again he has hit them with a .22 rifle. When shot, he says, they turn over on their backs and lie still, but when approached the apparently dead reptile suddenly "comes to life again," gets on its feet with marvelous speed, and disappears down a hole. About the only way to collect specimens is with a noose.

Tell How Tranquilizers Act on the Brain

LOS ANGELES—More light has been thrown on the way tranquilizers act on the brain by scientists at the University of California, Los Angeles.

In animal studies it was found that reserpine by itself acted directly on certain brain areas to bring about its tranquilizing effects. These effects are apparently brought about by a reaction of the drug on regulating mechanisms in the brain stem.

One of the mechanisms affected by the drug is a center called the RAS (reticular activating system) which is known to regulate how "awake" we are.

It had previously been thought that reserpine stimulated the flow of serotonin, a substance thought to be a neuro-hormone, which in turn acted on the brain.

Home Taught

CHICAGO—Today, an estimated 10 per cent of the nation's licensed engineers are home taught. More than 32,000 persons enrolled in some study engineering courses through correspondence schools in 1957.

NEW BOOK IN THE COUNTY LIBRARY

The White Witch

By Elizabeth Goudge.

Returning to the historical novel with which she so successfully won Green Dolphin Street, Miss Goudge now gives us a rich, long panorama of England in the time of Charles I, when Cavalier and Puritan strove for the mastery of the realm. The story opens with the appearance of Francis Leyland in the little village of Flowercote. Francis Leyland comes as an itinerant painter, but in reality he is a nobleman and a Royalist spy. He meets the Hasselwood family who are Puritan sympathisers, and young Jenny Haselwood who is to remain in his memory through the hard years of war until he returns. And there is Frongia, half gypsy herself and in love with Yoben, who is more than a gypsy. Being a good romany, she knows something of the mystic arts, but uses them wisely, unlike some other women in the village. She befriends Francis Leyland and thus begins a whole series of adventures —strange, dangerous, sometimes touching and romantic — culminating in the vindication of Frongia in the eyes of her fellow villagers.

Careful Management Gives Better Tobacco Stands

Better stands of tobacco are possible if growers will follow a few simple rules, say agronomists at VPI.

Here are their tips:

Be sure the fertilizer is not in direct contact with the roots of the plants.

Grade plants as they are drawn from the bed and use only those plants which are stocky, uniform in size, and free of disease and insect injury.

Do not let the roots of the plants dry out between the time they are drawn from the bed and the time they are planted in the field.

If the plant bed is dry at transplanting time, be sure to wet it thoroughly with clean water before drawing plants. This will prevent breaking off fine feeder roots which the plants have come to withstand the shock of transplanting and to become quickly established.

If grasshoppers are a problem, use one of the recommended insecticides in your transplant water. Dipping roots in a tarmplant solution is not recommended.

U. S. WARNED

Tokyo- Premier Nobusuke Kishi has issued a statement that overall relations between Japan and the United States, and not merely trade, would be seriously affected if excessive restrictions were pinced on imports from Japan.

Premier Kishi pointed out, during an interview, that Japan is buying twice as much from the United States as Americans are buying from Japan, and added that Japan would like to see her trade brought to a more equal position, not restricted.

A. H. S. Pupils Successful At Model Assmbly

Several of Appomattox High School's students had the wonderful opportunity of attending the 1958 Model General Assembly held in Richmond from April 10 - 12.

They were: Mary Anna McDearmon and Ryland Wilburn as delegates of the House; Frances Saunders and John Evans as delegates of the Senate, and Charles Burks as reporter.

They arrived in Richmond at approximately 6:00 P M, on Thursday night and checked in at their respective hotels. At 7 o'clock, the House and Senate convened separately for organization and roll call.

A joint assembly was then called at 7:30 P. M. At this time the youth officers and legislators were sworn in and the youth governor for 1958, Samuel James Pope, II', presented his inaugural address. In it he emphasized a better drivers training program in the schools, better roads, more math and science and an increase in teachers salaries, a state sales tax, better instruction in first aid, more hospitals for the mentally ill and better education and pay for the people who serve in the health service field.

After this, the legislators could either retire for the night or attend a social at the Winter Garden of the Hotel Richmond.

On Friday morning at 9 o'clock, Governor was a joint assembly of the House and Senate to hear a message from His Excellency, Honorable J. Lindsay Almond, Governor of Virginia. His main point was that he felt it was an obligation of every citizen of Virginia to learn about its governmental functions.

During the course of time that the delegates from Appomattox were there, they introduced three very worthy bills. They were: (1) To establish a system of public junior colleges. (2) To provide regulation for the establishment of automobile graveyards, (3) To require Virginia secondary roads to be better constructed and maintained where buses are operated for the purpose of transporting school students.

The first two of these three bills were either killed in the House or the Senate. But the last one was passed by both the House and Senate and signed by the youth governor.

So, as you can see, we can feel very proud of our school, our delegates which represented our school and most of all we can feel extremely proud of our principal and advisor, Mr. Christopher, who did so much in helping us to get organized.

—Charles Burks, Reporter.
